

When the calls for help come in, MNADV is here to answer!

On a single day in Maryland, 26 domestic violence programs across the state answered 1,449 calls for help. Behind each one is an advocate like Tracy.

By mid-morning, Tracy has already handled more than ten calls. One is from Alex, who has just escaped an abusive partner who used a firearm to threaten her and her children. Tracy helps Alex secure safety and stabilizes the crisis – but she sees the larger pattern: rising domestic related gun violence, survivors needing long-term solutions, and systems that don't always connect.

Tracy can meet the immediate need, but she cannot change statewide conditions by herself. So, she calls the Maryland Network Against Domestic Violence (MNADV).

At the intersection of policy, practice, and prevention, MNADV connects agencies, aligns strategy, and ensures frontline realities shape statewide response. When Tracy calls, she gains insight, tools, and a shared approach. She is not alone. Each year, MNADV responds to over 240 requests from frontline advocates and equips 2,000+ professionals through training and technical assistance – strengthening both crisis response and long-term system effectiveness.

Through partnerships with Lethality Assessment Program providers in Maryland and nationwide, MNADV advances a research-backed model that helps identify high-risk survivors earlier and connect them to services before violence escalates.

Safety also requires economic stability. MNADV's SEED Program (Survivor Economic Empowerment and Development) provides flexible funding to help survivors overcome barriers like housing and transportation, supporting long-term resilience and healing. And MNADV's PETS project (Pets Ease Trauma for Survivors) helps local domestic violence providers support survivors of intimate partner violence and their pets in finding safe, stable housing together.

For 45 years, MNADV has strengthened those who answer the call – so they can stand between trauma and safety with clarity and confidence. But Tracy's call is only possible because MNADV is there to receive it.

Corporate and philanthropic partners like you make that possible – sustaining training, advancing prevention, aligning policy, and supporting survivors beyond crisis. When you invest in MNADV, you strengthen the network behind every advocate and ensure that when advocates like Tracy reach their limit, someone answers the call for change.
