The BEACON SpotLight
A Study of Constitutional Issues by Topic

Issue 40: Seeking New Information First & Foremost—Lesson II

Thank you for joining me for Lesson II of the four-part Patriot Corps lesson course known as SNIFF, which is short for Seeking New Information First & Foremost.

In Lesson I, we examined that in the United States, governing powers in the normal case are DIVIDED by ratification of the U.S. Constitution, into enumerated federal powers and reserved State powers.

The enumerated federal powers in this normal case may be generally described as the "Little Powers" that may be directly implemented in the "Big Implementation Area."

However, in the abnormal case, "Big Powers" may be directly implemented in special "Little Implementation Areas," that include the District of Columbia and exclusive legislation area forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards and other needful buildings.

The Great Deception involves federal servants seeking to become our political masters by falsely extending their special "Big Powers" beyond the "Little Implementation Areas," instead, into the "Big Implementation Area."

This behind-the-scenes and under-the-radar extension of allowed special powers beyond directly-allowable boundaries shows us the path forward, because what is indirectly extended by deception cannot withstand a direct challenge brought fully out into the open.

Americans are being bound in chains by paper tyrants who proclaim the miraculous power to transform their enumerated "Little Powers" into all-encompassing "Big Powers," as if by magic, so they may exercise "Big Powers" in a "Big Implementation Area."

But the U.S. Constitution never authorizes this false extension, even as the Constitution as currently worded doesn't automatically prevent it from happening, indirectly.

The good news is that we may amend the Constitution to directly prohibit the indirect extension of special "Big Powers" beyond "Little Implementation Areas."

The great news is that we don't actually have to amend the Constitution, to contain those special powers to named boundaries. But, without an amendment doing it automatically in every case, we will have to be intentional about enforcing it, individually, in each case.

The fantastic news is that we may contain or throw off all federal activity that is beyond the spirit of the Constitution, by ending this charade of allowable powers that are falsely extended beyond allowable boundaries.

No person who exercises delegated federal authority has ever changed the Constitution. No person who exercises delegated federal authority has ever changed the allowed powers that they may directly exercise everywhere in the country. Therefore, members of Congress, American Presidents and Supreme Court justices, may never change anything that matters. Nothing they have ever done that is outside of the spirit of the Constitution binds Americans living outside of the "Little Implementation Areas."

Copyright by Matt Erickson
August 15, 2023

Remember, only the American States may change the Constitution or the allowed powers that federal servants may directly exercise throughout the Union.

Therefore, other than in exclusive legislation areas, right now, all federal actions beyond the spirit of the Constitution may be stopped, discontinued, ceased, halted, withdrawn, ended, axed, and terminated, without an election and without enacting any specific piece of legislation. We merely stop allowing the special powers for exclusive legislation areas to be exercised in the general area—we stop the false extension of "Big Powers" beyond the "Little Implementation Areas." We stop the indirect exercise of "Big Powers" in the "Big Implementation Area."

Let's dive in the "Little Implementation Areas," to get a better understanding of them, to learn how to proceed.

The exclusive legislation lands of Congress first include the District of Columbia, which may not, by express constitutional command, exceed an area ten-miles-square in size. Ten-miles-square is 100 square miles, or some 64,000 acres, in maximum size.

Also included within the heading of exclusive legislation lands are most post offices, federal courthouses, old lighthouses, and other older, historic-use structures, but they do not include the federal "public lands" found in the western States.

I should mention that only about one-third of military forts and army bases are found on exclusive legislation lands—most military installations are yet located on lands otherwise governed by the States. It is true that the States largely take a hands-off policy towards all federally-owned parcels, even those not within exclusive legislative authority, but that doesn't mean State authority doesn't extend over these federal lands that were never ceded to Congress.

As the 17th Clause of the 8th Section of the 1st Article of the U.S. Constitution tells us, these special federal areas were created by "cessions" of "particular States" and the "acceptance" of Congress.

"Particular" States "ceded" or willingly transferred particular parcels of ground to Congress for special uses. Once Congress accepted the parcels, governing authority over these parcels passed to Congress, exclusively. Think of the transfer process as a formal treaty between two sovereigns, transferring an ability to govern from one authority to another.

Whereas every State of the Union ratified the U.S. Constitution, and at least three-fourths of the American States ratified all the approved amendments, it only takes one State—the particular State in which a particular parcel of land is found—to give Congress a parcel of land for special federal purposes.

Americans have overlooked the most powerful clause in the Constitution, bar none, which transfers to Congress the ability to exclusively govern parcels of special lands "in all Cases whatsoever," in a very simple transfer process, because they don't know any better.

While exclusive legislation powers shouldn't be relevant outside exclusive legislation lands, as long as devious men may everywhere exercise this unfathomable power without challenge means that they will keep using it, until they are stopped. In Lesson IV, we will cover how scoundrels ever tapped into this source of unlimited power illegitimately.

The future of American freedom rests entirely upon our individual willingness to look behind this particular curtain, so patriots may discover the spectacular source of a wizard-like power that defies comprehension.

So, how does this discussion about "Little Power" in the "Big Implementation Area" and "Big Powers" in the "Little Implementation Areas" fit into our present horrid political condition, where federal servants act like our political masters?

The False Rule of Paper Tyrants rests entirely upon the devious substitution of the latter "Big Powers" into the former "Big Implementation Area."

A simple legal sleight of hand falsely appears to transform—within the "Big Implementation Area"—the allowed "Little Powers," ostensibly into "Big Powers," as if by magic.

Of course, federal servants can never change their "Little Powers" into "Big Powers," not in reality, nor by non-existent magic. Because nowhere does the U.S. Constitution ever allow the direct exercise of "Big Powers" in the "Big Implementation Area."

Federal servants merely bluff their way, using an allowed special power, beyond special areas. Of course, they also create confusion, to cover up what they are doing behind the curtain.

Therefore, our first and foremost objective as patriots must be to understand what is going on behind the curtain and then work to bring it out into the open, to end the charade. We SNIFF around until we find the right curtain to pull back, pull it back, and then BARK like crazy to draw attention to the only thing that matters.

In the 1939 movie classic "The Wizard of Oz," an ordinary but devious man created an elaborate illusion to convince people that he had magical powers. But, after sniffing about and finding the source of the stench, Toto pulled back the curtain and exposed the wizard's great powers as nothing but hot air and a fancy sound and light show.

Our political masters are equally full of hot air, on all matters beyond the spirit of the Constitution.

Two centuries of escalating federal illusions are all about creating sufficient confusion to perpetuate a lie, that we may expose, to resecure our freedom.

Of course, the crux of the matter is how do the scoundrels ever exercise the "Big Powers" even indirectly, in the "Big Implementation Area?"

This fundamental question will be discussed and answered in Lesson IV. But, first, please join me for Lesson III, where I investigate the "Big Powers" themselves, that are allowed in the "Little Implementation Areas."

Copyrighted by Matt Erickson:
August 15, 2023