

Motivational Interviewing with Families

1-hour synchronous distance learning webinar!

Motivational Interviewing (MI) is an empirically-supported conversation style that helps people resolve ambivalence about behavior changes. The theoretical model for MI specifies that rather than professionals telling people why they should change, they elicit and reinforce clients' reasons using reflective listening, open questioning, and summarization. It has been found that the in-session levels clients express motivation to change, 'change talk,' predicts change at follow up. Family members can play crucial roles in treatment for addictions and other behavioral health challenges, and therefore learn how to utilize MI to evoke motivations toward change. In this webinar, you will learn how MI can be adapted for use with family members.

Until recently, there has been limited work applying Motivational Interviewing to family-centered care. This workshop will introduce core concepts of using MI with family members. Join Dr. Doug Smith as he shares research and strategies from his new book Motivational Interviewing with Families (2025).
